Governor Edmund G. Brown Jr Declares State of Emergency in Trinity County

On 08/31/17 Governor Edmund G. Brown Jr. issued an emergency proclamation for Trinity County due to the effects of the Helena Fire, which has burned thousands of acres, damaged critical infrastructure, destroyed homes and caused the evacuation of residents.

Heat Event Briefing

The California State Warning Center (CSWC) continues to monitor the upcoming strong high pressure that will maintain very hot weather across California into next week. The National Weather Service Western Region Headquarters Regional Operations Center (NWS W-ROC) and California Independent System Operator (CAISO) are closely monitor the potential impacts due to the widespread elevated temperatures and providing updates as they become available. Due to the prolonged hot temperatures across California, the NWS W-ROC will provide a Heat Briefing to the CSWC on 08/31/17.

Flex Alert

- The California Independent System Operator Corporation (ISO) has issued a statewide Flex Alert that calls for voluntary electricity conservation from 1300 – 2200 hours today, 09/01/17. Per the ISO Emergency Response Coordinator (ERC), ISO does not anticipate having any issues meeting demand during the heat event.
- Consumers are urged to conserve electricity especially during the afternoon when air conditioners typically are at peak use. Consumers can help avoid power interruptions by turning off all unnecessary lights, using major appliances before 1300 hours and after 2200 hours, and setting air conditioners to 78 degrees or higher.
- Persistent hot temperatures and tight supply can strain the power grid, as air conditioner use increases. The forecast peak use on 09/01/17, is expected to exceed 50,000 megawatts, which if met will be the highest demand on the grid seen so far this year. The ISO's service territory serves about 80 percent of California's electricity consumers.

 - Heat risk increasing; widespread areas reaching “very high” levels Saturday and Sunday
 - Highs up to 110+ in the Sacramento Valley
 - Overnight lows remaining in mid 70s to around 80 this weekend in interior valleys and LA Basin
 - Hot temperatures will continue near the central coast early next week
- High fire danger far N. CA mountains today-tonight
- Isolated-scattered showers/thunderstorms possible S. CA deserts/mountains today; precipitation chances gradually increase northward through the weekend, with possible tropical moisture from Lidia (currently near southern tip of Baja Peninsula)

High Temperature Forecast

Thursday, Aug 31

Friday, Sep 1

WEATHER OF CONCERN

Weather of Concern

- High pressure will continue to produce dangerously hot weather in California.
- The remnants of a tropical system may bring some showers and thunderstorms to portions of Southern California.

Active Weather Warnings, Watches and Advisories by County:

- <https://alerts-v2.weather.gov/counties/CA>

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

Strong high pressure will be over the region through Saturday. North-Northeast/Offshore winds will be 10-15 mph with gusts to 20-25 mph during nights and mornings, and just a bit lighter during afternoons. In far Northwest California Northeast winds will gust to 30 mph or so during nights and mornings and 20-25 during afternoons. Temperatures will be as much as 20 degrees above normal. Afternoon relative humidity (RH) will be 5-15%, with recovery only to 20-30% at night in the breezy areas. The stable conditions under the strong high will also lead to poor smoke dispersion and poor air quality in canyons and valleys near active fires. The marine layer will be shallow and only areas along the immediate coast will get relief from the very hot temperatures.

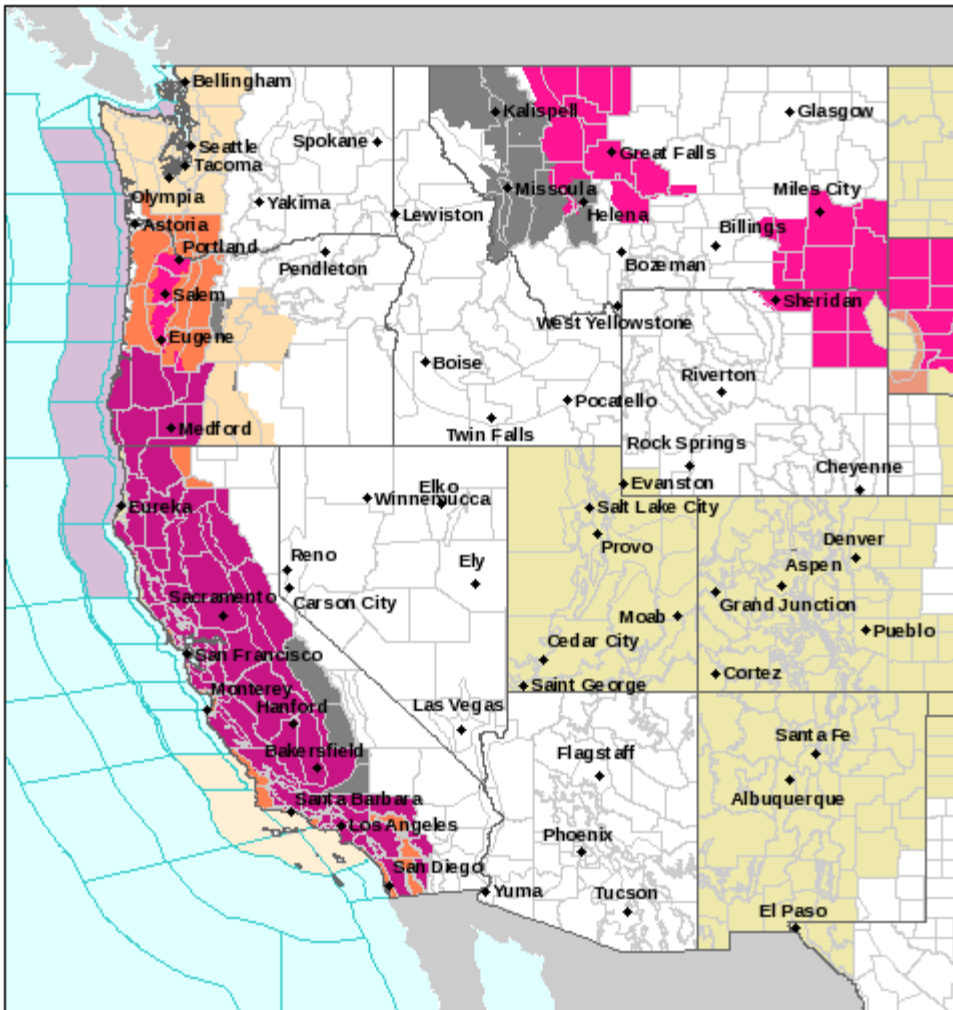

On Sunday the flow will turn Southeast-South as the high repositions over UT/NV. This will allow onshore flow to return in coastal PSAs and the delta breeze to bring cooler humid air to most of the Sacramento Valley. There is a chance that subtropical moisture will move through Southern California and up toward Northern California late Sunday and produce isolated thunderstorms in the mountains. If this pattern materializes thunderstorms will increase over the region during the early and middle part of next week, but with increasing humidity and rainfall.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

Scattered thunderstorms continued through the overnight hours across much of the desert and adjacent areas of the San Bernardino and San Jacinto Mountains. These storms have been producing brief downpours as they move northward at 10 mph. Since the atmosphere is quite unstable, scattered convection will be possible throughout the day across the Angeles, San Bernardino and Cleveland N.F. into the desert. Other areas, including the Sierras southwest into Ventura County, will see thunderstorm development by early afternoon. The storms are expected to produce rainfall and dry lightning is not expected outside the desert. Near record high temperatures in the 90s near the coast to 110 in the valleys and lower foothills will be possible today. Less convection is expected with the highest concentration of storms likely occurring over the southern Sierras. While RH has increased over much of the district, minimum RH will be low across the central coast interior where minimums around 10% will be possible in San Benito and interior Monterey County. There will likely be a lull in thunderstorm activity tomorrow as strong high pressure builds into northern California, but subtropical moisture may reach Southern California Sunday and Monday, bringing a better chance of wet thunderstorms to areas south and east of I-15. It will continue to be extremely hot over Central California this weekend where highs will likely surpass September records in the San Joaquin Valley. The central coast interior may see readings close to 110. But temperatures should cool slightly Sunday and Monday over the southern part of the state due to more clouds and weak onshore flow. Next week, look for temperatures to remain 5-10 degrees above normal with isolated storms each afternoon near the higher terrain. No strong winds are expected (outside of thunderstorm activity) the next 7-10 days.
